Stay trim and healthy with pendulum power

By TIM FARRAGUT

Nutrition-minded shoppers across America are naming themselves with an eerie little gadget that is helping them stay trim and healthy — through "pendulum power."

In ancient times, people believed the mysterious power of the pendulum could help find out gold and silver or reveal the sex of an unborn child.

Now, the pendulum is found its way into the food shops and supermarkets of America as the sales shoppers' handy helper in selecting healthy, nutritious and thermically free foods.

"I visited a dream of shopping without my pendulum," declared Peggy Burdette, of Gilman, Tex., as she studied bins of produce in a neighborhood grocery market.

She holds a weighted silver chain over a head of red cabbage. The weight begins to swing easily in a clockwise direction. Peggy smiles and puts the cabbage in her cart.

If the swinging weight — Peggy's pendulum — had moved in a clockwise direction, she would have known the cabbage was unhealthily fat.

Peggy is a member of the North Texas Physiologists Association and became interested in pendulums by reading books on the subject.

"You can order pendulums through catalogs," she said. Or you can make your own. All you need is a object that will weigh down a string or a piece of string.

"A hanging clock or excellent for the weight part. It makes a fine pendulum."

Determined to prove the an-credible value of pendulum power, Peggy selects a bin of chocolate-chip cookies. As her pendulum is held over the bin, it begins its mysterious swinging motion — in a counter-clockwise direction. This cookie is fat.

Astrologer Charles M. Light of Oak Lawn, Tex., also uses pendulum power when he shops for food.

"It's really the chemical balance of the body that makes food good or bad for you," he explained. "That's why the pendulum, in such an instant, can

IT'S A MAD, MAD WORLD Tiny patrol cars squeeze 500-pound cop out of a job and onto strict diet

As American cars shrink, a bulky policeman grew to a waist-squeezing 350 pounds.

That put him in a top Joe Lynch in such a bind that he's out of work and on a diet. He just couldn't fit into the tiny new patrol cars.

"He was big even when he was hired. The problem arose when cars began getting smaller and the cops getting bigger," said the town official who put Lynch on diet.

If the chunky cop loses enough weight, he can fit back to work, officials said.

"I am on a diet of a beer a day for a year to lose 500 pounds," the Logan Township, Pa., man said.

"It's not die. If the weight's lost by then my resignation is automatically tendered."

And said may be all Lynch can afford. He's a burped from the force a while ago.

Beast puts fight on their house

A wild beast with a spotted coat has been found in a house built with some explaining to do.

Terry and Mary Harper called the cops after finding a door torn apart and lumber in a slanting ditch ripped away from their house.

The stunned couple found teeth, claws, blood and a small handful of dollars of destruction.

"We're pretty sure that it was some sort of wild animal that bit into our house, and the police think it was a wolf," Mrs. Harper said.

Their distraught man in Vincennes, Ind., asked them to report the story three times.

And he still doesn't believe it.

Hundreds of lives depended on the courage and endurance of a lone firefighter

Day of terror in a towering inferno

By JOE KERGER

A heroic fireman risked his life to save hundreds of terrified office workers from being burned alive in an inferno that raged through a huge skyscraper.

In an incredible display of raw courage, firefighter Frank McAnillo threw himself against a red-hot fire door—breaking a garage wall of flame that threatened to blast the door open and engulf scores of fleeing workers.

"It hadn't been for Frank, a lot of people would have died. It's a fact," New York City Deputy Fire Chief John Fogarty told THE NEWS.

"He's a professional and he prevented a serious fire from turning into an unimaginable tragedy. That's all you can ask of a man."

A secretary who escaped the blaze said: "People were running down the stairs screaming and everyone was guessing they could make it out of there."

"All we could think about was the movie 'Towering Inferno'—it could have been just like that. What an awful way to die."

"All I can say is thank God to that fireman!"

More than 125 firefighters sped to the scene when the nightmare blaze erupted on the 47th floor of a huge Manhattan skyscraper, sending horrified workers scrambling for their lives.

Frank McAnillo, a 35-year-old fireman, was one of the first firefighters to reach the floor in the heart of New York City's financial district.

As a bright orange fireman's uniform, McAnillo sprinted down a 47th floor hallway, where he found a burning elevator against a metal alarm agency door, threatening to spring it open.

That door was all that separated the flaming elevator from the stairway where Frank stood—and where hundreds of panicked workers were trapped by searching for a way out. From there, if the door burst open the deadly inferno would surge into the stairway and burn everyone there to a crisp.

The brave fireman jammed his fist against the life-saving door, shoving with all his might to keep the red-hot metal from popping out of its frame.

"I could hear the fire roaring and pounding on the other side and the heat was so bad I could barely stand it," he said later.

"I knew it would be a disaster if I didn't hang on, so I stood it out."

For 10 long, agonizing minutes, the tough firefighter tried to keep the door closed so the fleeing office workers could find their way to safety from the blazing building.

"I was there for about 30 minutes, but it seemed like a lifetime," Frank recalled. "I didn't know how long I could last, so I stood there hoping the cops would put the fire out in a hurry."

"I knew if the door blew, I'd Kidnapped girl tells of her 3-month horror ordeal

"The most terrifying time in my life is finally over. But the memory of it will haunt me forever like a scary nightmare."

Twelve 13-year-old Bergamo Miria Corradi brushed away the tears that welled in her lovely eyes as she recalled the unimaginable hell she endured at the hands of her brutal captors.

"For three awful months, I was chained at concrete weights so that I couldn't escape," she said. "They never let me wash or change my clothes."

And toward the end I began to give up hope of ever being freed. I thought they would kill me."

Miria, the daughter of millionaire restaurateur Alfredo Corradi, was kidnapped by four thugs as she left a disco ball fashion show on the Italian coast, south of Rome.

When police captured her kidnappers and freed her, Miria was still wearing the jeans and sweater she wore the night she was kidnapped. "They held her in a tiny, dark cell that was only big enough for a mattress," Police Inspector Enzo Mancuso told THE NEWS. "She was very thin and hungry. I think that anyone could suffer such a horror on a child. Physically, she will be all right. But the mental scars will always remain."

"My hands and feet were always tied with heavy steel chains to two concrete blocks," Miria said. "But they were loose enough for me to move around a little."

"They put a portable toilet next to my bed and they would empty it every few days. This was my drink, and they pushed my food tray through a wooden partition."

Police described Miria's makeshift prison as "a miserable, dirty cell that measured only 6 by 7 feet."

"But I always felt a small bit of hope that I would be freed," Miria said. "I was getting a decent food—chicken, salad, milk and bread. And they allowed me to watch TV and to read newspapers and magazines."

Throughout her three-month captivity, Miria's father was repeatedly contacted by the kidnappers in the hopes of negotiating the payment of her ransom.

hope that I would be freed," Miria said. "In the past few days, the men of the police who kidnapped me became human and more businesslike."

"It seemed the negotiations weren't going very well. For the first time, I thought that they were going to kill me."

But late one night police burst into the house in Lodi, where Miria was being held prisoner, 35 miles south of Rome.

Police said six persons were captured without a struggle when they raided the hideout. They recovered $250,000 believed to be part of a ransom paid by Miria's father, and possibly part of a ransom paid by the family of another kidnap victim who is still missing.

Among those arrested at Miria's terrible "prison" was Luciano Leo Sanna, sought for several years as the murderer of a politician.

"I'm happy to be back with my family once again," Miria said. "It was a nightmare."

New pills could end tooth decay

Two heartbreak of darkness, decaying teeth and agonizing, quaking pain of cavities can be prevented by two remarkable new pills.

One of these little miracle works of dentistry in the mouth and releases a vaccine that kills decay-causing bacteria. The other pill, implanted in the mouth, releases fluorine that makes teeth cavity resistant.

The outstanding pills were developed by the National Institute of Dental Research in Bethesda, Md. A top researcher there, Dr. William Bowen, says they "should virtually abolish tooth decay."

Dr. Bowen says both pills "have proved to be safe and effective" in human trials.

The multi-drug pills are tested periodically in the human trial protection. The fluoride pills don't dissolve, but they have to be replaced from time to time with fresh implants.

Researchers plan to conduct more tests before making the pills available to the public.

Ultra-modern dream house cleans itself

Housework will be a thing of the past for Frances Gabe when she's through building her new home — it'll be the world's first totally self-cleaning house.

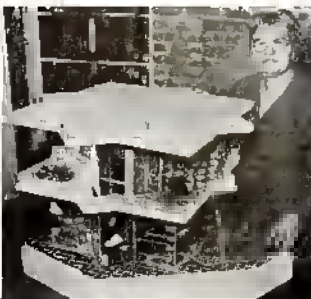

The 44-year-old grandmother from Newberg, Ore., has spent 20 years at the amazing project and she's pulled for 80 parents on her incredible labor-saving devices.

And come next spring, she'll never have to wash another dish or clean another door — the work will all be done automatically.

"My house will take women from the drudgery of domestic chores forever," she declared. "In the ultra-modern dream house cupboards have little dishwashers and the closets into washer-dryers."

"The interior of the house — including walls, ceilings and furniture — is cleaned with a mist of warm water, emitted from high pressure from a rotating apparatus that looks a little like a light fixture," explained Maggie Webster, executive vice president of the inventors' Licensing and Marketing Agency in Torrance, Calif., a business that promotes new ideas.

"One of these devices is each room in the clean area 45 to 60 feet and will also dry the room after cleaning and provide a heating and cooling system. The apparatus is water powered, just like turning on the faucet.

"Walls and ceilings are built from materials which withstand moisture and are designed to be impervious to water and dust and table tops automatically seal themselves from moisture before the system is activated.

"Paper products and other non-washable items are kept in sealed containers and there are special covers for books and pictures."

There is also spot cleaning for small areas which also utilizes when the rest of the room does.

One of Frances' most remarkable inventions is a toilet fresher.

"No hanging clothes in a closet, press a button and in about an hour the clothes are washed, dried and ready to wear," said Maggie. "The closet itself is also self-cleaning because the same water that washes the clothes also washes and rinses the closet walls and floor."

"Being dishes is also as easy as in the self-cleaning house. 'You just fill the self-cleaning dishes from the table and put them in the cupboard where they will be washed and dried, ready to be put back on the table,'" said Maggie.

To keep the house clean, the system should be activated once a day for about an hour. You just turn it on, close the door and forget about it.

"The water which falls from the ultrasonic drains from the house through a central point in the fireplace, taking with it any soot from the fire."

The estimated price tag for a self-cleaning home starts at about $200,000. "But," says Maggie, "it will be worth the price for people to buy the dishes and individual devices to fit into their existing homes once they're so much improved."

And, for Frances Gabe, her years of hard work, planning and incredible attention to detail are about to pay off.

"I've spent 20 years working on this project and the end is totally to right," she said.

Love blooms second time for couple who remarry 50 years after divorce

A man and woman who had been divorced for nearly 50 years left in love all over again — and remarried on the anniversary of their first wedding 63 years ago.

Lagman and Albertine Musser related the last words of their lives and hugs still echoed talk of their upcoming honeymoon.

They had first met in 1916 and settled down in Mt. Kisco, N.Y.

Then, the Depression hit. Lagman was out of work and the Musser took their son to the young couple.

In 1925, they split up. Each remarried much later, but Albertine's husband died and Lagman, who had moved to Florida, became a widower last year.

He began talking about his first love, located and phoned her. "If she spoke for hours long distance, they would make good their original promise — 'all death do us part.'"

And, on the date of their first wedding, they remarried — in the same Bellevue, Pa., church where they first exchanged vows.

The 85-year-old bride wore pink and a beautiful corsage and her 86-year-old husband couldn't wait to go to Niagara Falls for a honeymoon.

Cat survives 180-foot fall

A lucky kitty survived after plummeting 180 feet from a balcony to some bushes below. The 6-month-old cat, Anna, didn't even suffer broken bones. She had been perched on a apartment balcony ledge in Southfield, Mich., when her owner called to her.

"She must have been really startled," said Iris Finckler. "When I called her name, she jumped."

A veterinarian who examined Anna called her survival incredible.

Kind neighbors fix deaf mute's home

A 70-year-old woman who can't hear or speak was tragically ripped off by a man who took $4,500 to repair her home, a deaf and blind man, and then disappeared.

But kindhearted neighbors who shared Douglas Watkins' plight came to the rescue. They donated time and material, fixed her sliding, hot, lock and new installation and restored a leaky gas furnace.

The city of Wichita, Kans., phoned in and used money from the housing department's emergency fund to help with repairs. Douglas was given a new hot water heater to replace a 20-year-old one. And, for the first time, her home has been hooked up to city water service.

Man picks car dealer and wins

An angry pickup man picked a car dealership that wanted him to pay more than $1,600 for repairs he said weren't necessary — and he won enough money for a brand new truck.

Landscape Nick Finney took his truck into a Las Vegas, Nev., Toyota dealership for service. When he hadn't earned for his vehicle property and the bill was $1,600-plus.

"I decided I was going to fight it out," said Nick. So he hired an attorney and ran ads for people who wanted to join the pickup line.

The dealership ran its own lawyers and Nick pulled off his pickup when he got a settlement of $7,000.

Jerry Montoyo was lost and hungry — could lessons learned in boyhood save him?

Hunter's 13-day battle for life

E. DICK DONDIAN

Deer hunter Jerry Montoya — gave up for dead — endured 13 terrifying days in a rugged mountain wilderness by relying on his faith in God to pull him through.

As release and ground searches failed to find any trace of the missing man.

"He is a very lucky guy to be alive," Mendocino County, Calif., Sheriff Lt. Rob Parker told THE NEWS. "The area where he was lost is extremely rugged and dangerous."

"The marmoset he was lost on is about 2,000 feet high and it drops down to a canyon floor 3,000 feet below that. After six days, I didn't think he would ever be found alive."

Monday's hole-taking wilderness ordeal began when he strayed away from two buddies who had joined him on a hunting trip into the Afondelmo National Forest, 125 miles northwest of Sao Paulo.

"I just got turned around," the 33-year-old hunter said.

"The priests were what I needed. I looked them over, and I just wondered around trying to find a way out."

"My ankles started to bleed badly, because I was wearing cowboy boots that didn't work out very well — they're just made for walking in. I was always wet and really cold at night."

Water was plentiful from streams that meander through the mountain, and from the four terrible thundersources that had soaked Montag. To the skin. But for the day, he had no food.

"I began to feel really weak," he said. "I tried to eat the berries that grow everywhere, but they were much too bitter for me to swallow."

There were times — really bad times — when I felt like turning my rifle on myself, just to get the nightmare over and done with.

"Outlines I'd just take out my wallet and look at the pictures of my wife Maria and our three children. I'd stare at the pictures and think of them. I got through the low times on the love of my family and my faith in God."

Then, like a miracle, on his sixth day without food the starving hunter spotted a deer grazing on the hillside, him. There, only 40 yards away, was food and the hope of survival.

Montoya, knowing the deer was his last shot or for life, took careful aim with his .270-caliber rifle and squeezed the trigger. The deer dropped to its tracks before the racking echoes of the shot faded from the canyon walls.

Too weak to climb in the spot where the deer lay, Montoya could only lay in the rain as he watched the deer national slowly rolled down the mountain, almost into his lap.

He cleaned and smoked the feet right there, eating rations, before blowing a good

'There were times when I felt like turning my deer rifle on myself' supply of meat in the back pouch of his hunting jacket.

"It was old! Rough old there," Mooney said. "But with food and water — and a lot of prayers — I knew that now I could make it. Somehow, I was going to get out. I wasn't going to die."

For seven more agonizing days, the harter wandered through the fog-shrouded, pathless mountain forest. He spent the miserable nights huddled under the trees.

Melroy had cut a stout branch at a cane and he carved out the linings of Maria and the children. He did it "just in case" it didn't make it. So they'd find something to know I was thinking of them every day, even when I was desperately struggling for my life."

Finally, on the 13th day, the dispute to rest through which he had wandered with no sense of direction for 40 miles offered an opening — a dirt road that Minerva knew had to go somewhere.

There, Violet MUIr, of Colorado, happened to cross his path.

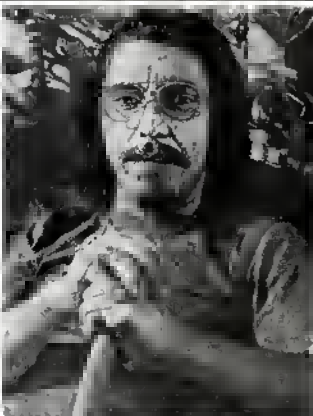

"Hey! You're the man that's been dead for days," Miller exclaimed.

Authorities later checked the young hunter and decided he was in good condition and didn't need medical treatment.

"I knew my husband would survive one way or another, even though they had closed the book on him," Morris said. "He was raised by his father as a Bul Montoya isn't so sure his incredible survival was all his doing.

"If I'm with a first-class woodman," he explained, "I wouldn't have gotten myself lost. I figure the cross I went around my neck helped. My prayers were answered when I needed help most."

Survivor: Jerry Montoya returned to his Fremont home. He holds the cane which he saved his family's lives.

Expert says women of Salem were possessed by dope — not Satan

Witches were freaked out on drugs

By DICK DONOVAN

The Salem witches who were tortured and hanged in the 1600s really weren't the evil-doing disciples of the devil — they were just freaked out on drugs!

And the rising village children whose wild accusations sent those innocent people to the gallows were also high on mind-blowing poisons.

That is the opinion of 51-year-old Denaw University Professor Richard Mayes, an expert on the link between witchcraft and hallucinogenic drugs.

"The theory is that the witches of Salem were not really witches at all," Mayes told THE NEWS. "They were suffering from mild infections of a disease now known as St. Anthony's Fire."

"The disease is caused by eating a fungus called ergot which can grow on grain, like wheat or rye. It produces an LSD-type hallucination which can be as bad as being — lolol."

"The Puritans didn't know what to make of the crazy behavior. They just figured those women were possessed by the devil — that they were evil witches."

Mayes said there were other plagues in the Middle Ages which caused wild and uncontrollable hallucinations. Among them were jansenism (their people), heresim and mandam (Mazay people) whose branded most members the hair on their bodies. It is accurate and was once believed to have magical powers.

Centuries ago in Europe, thousands of people died from St. Anthony's Fire brought on by consuming diets of grain infected by the ergot fungus.

"The disease caused a constriction of the blood vessels which brought on ergotism," Mayes said. "Death was very painful. Arms and legs would rot and drop off, the victims would go into convulsions and, mercifully, they would die."

"It was when the dying victim went into convulsions that they were thought to be possessed by the devil. Anyone who acted like that had to be a witch."

In the 1600s, out more than 1,000 people were condemned to death in England for witchcraft. But in Germany, the classic land of witches, more than 100,000 accused but innocent people were tortured — then burned alive at the stake.

Those only "crimes" many experts believe, was that they had consumed one of the LSD-type drugs which would be known for centuries to come.

"If the Puritans of Salem were to travel through time and find himself in America in the 1600s and witness someone on LSD trip, he would say that person was a witch," Mayes said.

Most of the people accused, tortured and condemned in the infamous Salem witch trials were the innocent victims of charges leveled against them by teenage girls who had been known to Dr. Otto Prentiss, a doctor, on the screaming coast.

The Salem Witch Trials

Hysteria of young girls was looked out on an LSD-type drug when they accused Salem, Mass., residents of being witches.

valuable, clutch burning hallucinations of their hands, pain, fear and talk gibberish.

When the girls were questioned about their bizarre behavior, they would point to a person and accuse the person of being a witch.

The accusation was all that was needed to subject the accused to a horrific ordeal of torture. It was accused admitted that he or she was in fact a witch, all was forgiven.

If they didn't make the admission, they were ultimately condemned. Scores went to their death at the end of a long and painful rope.

Mayes said the belief that witches can fly may have started with the first hallucinogenic plants.

"Many people today have the same hallucinations when they trip out on LSD."

"In Salem, in the 1600s, they would have been accused of being witches."

"I had no ambitions to be an actress. I wanted to be a Gappertian."

20,000 incompetent surgeons are endangering American lives

American hospitals are unwittingly with potential kill, or doctors who are performing surgery even though they are untrained and unqualified.

In a shock report during the 51st Annual Clinical Congress in San Francisco, Dr. G. Thomas Shires said about 20,000 surgeons — two out of every seven in the nation — cannot meet competency standards.

"Consequently, surgery is being performed in many approved hospitals by untrained and unqualified individuals," the president of the American College of Surgeons declared.

The new president of the surgeons' group lambasted the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals (JCAH) for failing to develop a means of assessing competence in standards for hospital surgery.

"In the United States, we have no regulatory mechanism for ensuring a given degree of training for a given level of performance," Shires said. "The JCAH has a huge job."

In estimating how many surgeons are not properly trained, he said two out of every seven surgeons in U.S. hospitals today are not competent and can't meet the standards set by the American College of Surgeons.

"There are a total 80,000 people in the United States who consider themselves as surgeons," he said. "Of that group, you subtract the number who are not in training and you come down to 70,000."

"Out of that 70,000, about 20,000 are untrained — in states had a grizzly amount of training. There is no secret that numbers is a deciding significant."

There are and people entering the field and doing surgery — even in modern times in this decade — that have had little or no training."

The JCAH is a voluntary organization with 7,000 hospitals seeking accreditation because of its insurance firms will not reimburse services in unaccredited hospitals.

Professors with assessing the quality of surgeons qualifications said open mind room surgeons have not existed for decades, Shires said.

"What we are suggesting is that we will probably have to evolve all other ways of assessing it."

Shires, chief of surgery at the Cornell University Medical College in New York, suggested (during medical school curriculum) before they enter surgical residency programs.

Those royal brats of Monaco

The wild love flings of the blue-blooded brood is turning Princess Grace's hair gray

The spoiled royal brats of Monaco are hanging weary and annoyed on their parents with a series of shocking love flings, and embarrassing wild child's play.

By KITTY MacNAUL

Thanks to the recent annoucement that Prince Albert and Princess Stephanie, their 22-year-old mother Princess Grace has almost forgotten the discipline, courtesy and grace of Princess Caroline in the company and playboy Philippe Janni.

"Philippe's play boy can be incredible. You get it from your children," replied Grace last month when her children's shocking behavior rattled the royal palace with embarrassing, world-wide publicity.

Quiet and reserved Prince Albert quietly maintained America's highly coveted winner Monaco Race and TV newswoman Catherine Hunt during visits to New York.

That he shocked his mother by smuggling a high black Annakia ring with a black diamond in a European nightclub. He is 18 years older than the first blooded prince.

And, during a post poolside party at a Monte Carlo club, the 23-year-old prince charming began showing guests into the water and his 23 partygoers ended up all wet.

Teen beauty Princess Stephanie, now recently a adult daughter, who began showing Carolina-like behavior when she openly frolicked with a wild Spanish singer, Miguel Jose. Grace bailed Rose from the palace and left her Stephanie from seeing him.

The pretty 16-year-old princess jumped from Rose into a heavy puppy-love new with handsome 20-year-old Italian nobleman (Gabe Bonifazi). After openly snuggling with him on the beach, Grace grounded the princess.

That fall Grace was forced to send Stephanie to a new school after she got into trouble at the school she was attending by breaking the rules.

Finally Caroline, who by the real count is Grace's side, has returned to home down her lifestyle when a floweringly scandalous her parents with her shocking divorce from Junior last October.

Just when Grace thought Caroline had settled for a respectable best. Robert Kennedy Jr. began her dating. Kennedy clan member Robert Shriver, son of Senator Shriver, now of Sag Harbor, New York.

Even worse, Caroline returned to Monaco and got caught up in a bedroom battle in a nightclub during a fling with the notorious Hollywood romancer, Jack Nicholson.

The hard-core actor protected the princess with his fists.

But it was a shameful shock to Grace to find that her daughter was carrying on with a man 17 years older who is devoted to his use of drugs and his womanizing.

Five years ago before love scandals hit the royal family of Monaco's Palace. Princess Stephanie, Prince Albert and Prince Rainier III.

After a year of trying to live down her common background, by becoming the model wife of a royal prince, Grace is clearly shell-shocked by her rebellious children.

She's classily given up on Caroline, who has brought nothing but embarrassing publicity and scandal on her royal name.

But when husband Albert, the heir to Monaco's throne, Grace has been shopping for a royal mate for the prince and rumors say Princess Astrid of Belgium is at the top of the list. However, the prince has shown a preference for show girls, most recently with singer Debbie and two years ago with "That Incredible" girl Carly Lee Crosby whom he flipped over when he met her at a Monte Carlo luncheon in 1979.

Grace burst the then 22-year-old prince off to prepa-

Amherst College in America to get away from the then 22-year-old blonde actress.

There, Albert kept a low profile except for his weekend jaunts down to New York City where he parked his nights away at the town's wild disco.

"Like all mothers, I've often been tempted to strangle my daughter," Grace said about Caroline when she began her romance with Janni in 1977.

It now appears, that poor Monaco is ready to say the same about her two other uncontrollable offspring.

One of the few times Princess Caroline and ex-boyfriend Philippe Janni were happy was right after their 1979 honeymoon. The marriage-divorced was a blow to the Monaco's royal family.

Vulture-like crowd robs wounded cop

In a disgusting act of shameful cruelty, a vulture crowd descended like vultures on a policeman to rob him as he lay bleeding on the pavement.

Police Officer Thomas Kennedy, 23, was gunned down as he chased a robbery suspect through a New York City street. He managed to fire several rounds from his own gun before falling, blasted by five shots of the gunman's 3-mm automatic pistol.

Then, as he lay bleeding on the ground, a crowd of money-hungry salutes descended on the helpless cop.

"They tried to rob him after he was shot," said Deputy Chief of Detectives Robert Piro.

"It was the most disgusting sight I've ever seen," said a man who watched from a nearby window and who begged The NEWS not to use his name for fear of his life. "I'd never forget that scene as long as I live. Here was this cop who risks his life every day to uphold the law and instead of people trying to help him, they attack him to get whatever they can."

"It really makes you wonder what the world is coming to and it was in broad daylight, too."

Within minutes, a police car pulled up and the crowd fled.

The officers' act came less than a day after another New York policeman had been shot when he witnessed a drug deal.

Kennedy was snatched in the hospital. He had been hit twice in the left thigh, once in each foot and once in the buttocks. Only a bulletproof vest that deflected a shot to his back saved him from death.

Top stars fight both tension and fat at a no-nonsense health spa

By EILEEN BEANDY

Hollywood's glitzy men and celebs weigh in and work out at a spa where the routines are as rigorous they'd leave the less fit least.

Guests like Charlaine Tilton of "Dukes," Michael Learned of "Haise," talk show host Mike Douglas, singing sensation Barbara Streisand and Cindy Williams of "Laverne and Shirley" sweat all their avaricious pounds and restore their energy at the Palms — the special the-siars. And the Palm Springs, Calif., fitness resort is a fat-free zone from being a post-vacation spot where wealthy shobbies are pampered by indulgent staffers — it's an exercise regimen for adults.

For the stars, the day starts with a brisk three-mile walk through the countryside — at 6:30 a.m.

There aren't any long breakfasts in Kings over. About 10 a.m., the stars are back in the gym.

It's brass muffins, herb tea and fresh fruit, then an 11 a.m.

minutes of exhausting cardiovascular exercises.

In between daily soaks at the spa's saunas, jazzercise, body dynamics and yoga, they get special refreshments — like a special cup of hot broth or water with lemon.

With a 200-calorie lunch, a 400-calorie dinner and a total of only 700 calories a day and enough exercise to wear out in Olympic training camp, it's no wonder Charlaine Tilton lost 15 pounds in 10 months during two, one-week stays.

And what spa owner Sheila Cluff related says: "Charlotte new she wanted to improve herself, the spa replied, 'I won't quit trying until I'm a perfect 10.'"

Mylo Heener of "Taxi" runs to the Palms with her new husband, Frederic Forrest, every time she gets a shooting break from the demanding TV series.

"It's the best retreat possible," she says. "It gives me a nice lease on life."

The stars work out until their muscles ache and they lie in bed by 10 p.m. The Palms is not a place to reserve space if lazy days, whirlpool baths and soothing massages are someone's idea of a fitness vacation.

"Our guests are busy people who feel they need a respite from the stress and strain of daily living and a chance to get back into the best possible physical condition," says a Shook, recently elected the head female president of the American Association of Fitness Directors in Business and Industry.

Guests drink eight glasses of liquid a day — but no beer, broth and water with lemon. They get food prepared without salt, sugar or white flour. And they get endless hours of various exercises and fitness lectures.

The guests are charged a minimum of $400 a day for their stay at the Palms.

there six times for at least 10 days each time. Joan Lockhart, who played Blam on "Lassie" said being a regular of the spa saved her life when she was in a very serious car accident eight months ago.

"The doctors told me if I hadn't been in such good physical condition I would certainly have died," the actress said. And Peggy Rye, who plays Lula Hogg on "Dukes of Hazzard," says she's going to keep going to the fitness resort until she's so slim she'll have to be padded to play the TV role.

"Besides," she said, "I want to live long enough to collect my residuals."

Superstar like Barbara Streisand get relief from the tension and greater rest of their jobs at the famous Palm spa.

Guests at the swank Palm Springs health spa, including "Dukes" star Charlaine Tilton, maintain their daily study morning, three-mile walk.

There are post-swim rounds for relaxation at the Palms, but guests of the health spa find little time to loaf. Every hour of the day is devoted to getting in shape.

Experts tell how you can beat inflation and live better than ever before!

25 ways to stretch your paycheck

By DOR WHITTINGTON

Rising prices don't have to rob you of your hard-earned dollars as inflation rises. Financial security is again.

You CAN beat inflation with these 25 fantastic tips to stretch your paycheck. You'll love better, enjoy greater peace of mind and have a money to put aside — a tip that also could save you up to a hundred dollars a year.

This is a money-saving plan, as prepared exclusively for NEWS readers by a panel of top experts from across the country.

They include Dr. Elizabeth Wingard, professor at consumer economics at Cornell University at Ithaca, N.Y.; former IRS tax law specialist Paul St. Louis, whose latest book, "Money by Your Pocket" (Conto Data Publishing, $4.95) is the latest best-seller; Dr. Robert Williams, a associate professor at marketing at Northern Arizona University in Flagstaff and Dr. Frances Gaffey, professor of home economics at State University of New York at Stony Brook.

"Everyone who really wants to save

Most markets have products under their own label. You can borrow this money, says Dr. Wingard, editor of the Cornell University publication "Psychic Planning."

"This is a money management as a skill in learning to win. It's not something you're born with. It's something you learn and the more you practice it, the better you get."

"Once you get started, you'll be delighted at how well you do."

If you are employed, start your plan to recapture lost dollars by adjusting your W-4 form.

"The more exempt you claim, the bigger your take-home paycheck will be," says Strassler, author of the best-selling book, "All You Need to Know About the IRS."

"You can legally claim one, but don't claim more than that or the IRS will only give you a tax refund."

"If you can save a hundred dollars a year just by doing to your employer, saving for a W-4 form and a budgeting or withholding exemption."

For example, if you are married, earn $200 a week and claim one exemption, they'll take $24 out of your check. By claiming that you'll save $18 a week, or $948 a year.

If you're single and earning $240 a week, you'll save a little more exemptions instead of one. That'll be $978 a year.

The average tax refund last year was $100. If you were given to the government that was rightfully yours, you'd be able to have a little extra.

"Does your established your own income, set up a budget, and start by estimating a budget you spend so that you have a yardstick to measure your expenses."

"It's a rate person who really knows what they're spending," says Dr. Williams. "We did a series of studies five years ago and asked people how much they spent on groceries. They'd say $150 a month and then when we looked at their check stubs and receipts, it was really more like $225."

The experts agree you can't know where you want to go unless you know where you've been.

Start with a spiral notebook and carefully write down your expenses from this same month last year — a comparable month so you include insurance premiums and other extra ordinary expenses — and then record what you spend this month.

Includes the family — budget planning can't be done alone unless you live by yourself.

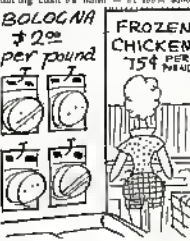

Now you're ready to help! tip is to set a money budget. You're buying groceries, an appliance, a car or something for the need.

Avoid installment buying whenever possible. Overcommitting your paycheck one credit is better than you realize.

"If used to seem so easy to buy on credit," Dr. Wingard said. "Stores and rack signs you to buy now, put a little money down and pay later, but if you look at what you're installment commitments are for the next 12 months, you may be in a bit of a shock."

"Take advantage of sales. Almost anything goes on sale — some items at regular seasons."

"Be prepared," said Williams, by having cash on hand — at least $100.

Feed regularly, in more economical ways when you're highest needs.

That's what has led to the advantage of sales, whether it's a car or a cabinet. Does it a little longer way to get the price for your money, but it's a plan that's a realistic approach.

"Remember, the $20,000 you're saving this year is only equal to $10,000 in 1978, so you'll have to lower your expectations."

Consider a debt consolidation loan.

For example, if you can borrow from your credit union, you'll save money because you'll pay off a credit card charge that may cost 18 percent with money you've borrowed for 18 percent. And you'll have a greater peace of mind. You'll pay only as much as you can make a month.

Shop for credit the way you would for any major purchase. Financing charges vary widely. Don't accept the first one. Credit unions are usually the best bet, followed by banks and finally by finance companies.

Frozen food is usually cheaper and as delicious as a hot fish.

"You can save on food and clothing and turn the heat lower, then blow it off by the more, the more credit arrangements," says Dr. Wingard.

"Pack your own lunch. Eating out is usually cost $10 to $15 a day. You can brown bag for a fraction of the cost and you'll actually get better health benefits. It's a little bit of a pain, but it's a little bit of a pain."

Use a meat thermometer when you cook meat in the oven. You'll avoid shrinkage from overcooked meats, says wingard and you'll save on the perfect cost every time.

Slide left or right and poultry for sandwiches. Packaged luncheon meats are far more expensive and rarely as healthy as home-prepared meats.

Check labels brands. Many grocery chains have their own brands which are usually cheaper than national labels and just as good.

Cook from scratch. When you buy convenience foods, you're paying for someone else to do the preparation.

Consult butcher or grocer for best bargains. They're usually delighted you've asked their advice and they are point out the best buy at the week.

If brown eggs are cheaper than white, buy the brown. They're cheaper and they taste exactly the same.

Buy frozen, amount of frozen in your diet. Field to light is probably an often low price. Turbidity, for example, is an excellent buy, rich in vitamin A about the cost of a can.

Use your own bananas. Buy frozen coconuts in a string, pineapple, apple, grapefruit or other fruit. Since they're experimental, combining two or more of the items will be healthier.

Don't eat drinks and be less expensive.

Pick your own fruits and vegetables. Most grocery stores have at least one special fruit. You'll save money, get the freshest fruits and vegetables in the store and you can turn it into a pleasant family outing.

Before you buy food, consider how you plan to use it. There's an error in paying for meat and whole chickens when you're going to use them in sauce or stew and chopped it's cheaper than the whole variety.

Search for coupons. Buying in bulk is your best way to save as a everyday expense from label paper to detergent, but it's impractical to do it alone. Through a group of people organized to make purchases, you'll be buying at almost wholesale prices and you won't have to worry about those annoying storage problems.

Save on maintenance by checking power-free activities. You'll be supplied at the library — museums, lectures, concerts and everything from kite-flying to Frisbee-throwing contests.

Make a family outing out of eating firewood. You'll be stocked for a winter and have a good time, too.

Buy out of season. Lemons usually go on sale in August and January, apples in August and February, lamb in a mid-winter. Christmas decorations go on sale after the holidays and the best buys in winter clothes are at the end of winter.

When remodeling around sales. Most cabinet companies have sales that can save you 10 percent of the remodeling cost if you plan the job around the sale season — usually in spring, sometimes in the fall.

Consider used appliances. "You can save $150 in a single purchase by buying a used instead of new dryer," says Dr. Gaffey.

Check the age of the TV model — most appliances have a 10-year life expectancy. Dryers often last longer. Buy a used appliance that is still in use. It's been sitting unused, there's more than something in a good walk in.

Cook from scratch — save money. Food you eat at work and build in.

Examine the TV. Don't just purchase a new one when you're paying. A used one, for example, will not only cost less initially, but it'll be cheaper to pay sales tax on and to insure.

Compare before you buy. Now, in the time of inflation, you can usually pay for the best thing you want. If you only want a 3 month interest that's $60 a year or a $100 a month in saving yourself $4 a month in monthly savings, checking account service

Dynasty's fiery Pamela Sue Martin is turned on by adventure, not men

Sexy Pamela Sue Martin, who plays the fiery, power-crazed villain Fabes on "Dynasty," doesn't get excited over a night on the town with a handsome beau— it's adventure that turns her on.

By PATRICIA LEWIN

The rebellious young actress has been turned down huge amounts of money to follow her wandering spirit. She quit the "Nancy Drew" series because it became too boring and she refused. $20,000 is apparently no "Love Boat" because she didn't like the port.

"I get bored being Nancy Drew because she was so unreal," and the 28-year-old beauty.

"I quit that series after 14 episodes because it got so boring and repetitious. They offered me a huge raise from $10,000 to $20,000 per episode, but I turned it down."

"Many don't mean all that much to me."

The idea of a comfortable life and a loving man is something to doesn't excite Pamela Sue either. Deep down in her heart, her real love is adventure.

"I have a very strong feeling there's a place in my life for a man—but I have a lot of reservations about the idea of marriage," she said.

"I'm going through a lot of changes. It would be hard to let somebody else in follow me around."

"I want to be fast to go through all the different things I want to experience, whether it's a sailing or sea time in Newfound, exploring ancient ruins in Mexico, or blowing it all in Las Vegas."

"I tend to get bored in my own world... I don't get in worry about being in with someone with me."

"When I have time alone, I'd rather read or go to films. I haven't watched television in two years, except for my own show. I'm independent, and I like to do what makes me happy. I have always been that way."

Pamela Sue showed her independence when she did love for a subsequent two years ago when she turned down a juicy part in a TV movie to join the Greenpeace Foundation's protest against the test plant at body seals.

Instead of playing it safe and pulling down a hefty salary, she flew to Newfoundland and trekked out onto the ice where she tried to keep hauled in blubber while the they swimmers to death.

"Protecting the environment is something I really believe in."

"I like being part of Greenpeace because it has called attention to the sensitive killing of whales in the Pacific and the horrible seal slaughter in the Atlantic."

Why? Here are just a few of the reasons.

Ribomins contains 26 vitamins, natural and valuable nutrient essential to good health and vitality—plus RNA!

Ribomins with RNA are tablets that "give you" vitamins—plus RNA!

Ribomins contain no additives, and no added starches or fillers.

Ribomins last for 10 years from date of manufacture.

Here's just some of what you get with each Ribomins tablet:

RNA (Ribonucleic Acid)—The powerful (recently discovered) natural substance that may hold the key to better health. According to a noted medical authority, this depletion of RNA may result in less than optimal body function.

HOW RIBOMINS' 26 INGREDIENTS WORK

Ribomins is a special formula of 26 vitamins, plus RNA and other valuable nutrients—plus RNA (Ribonucleic Acid). Twelve of the vitamins Ribomins provide an average of almost 100% of the 1940 U.S. Government's RDA (Recommended Daily Allowance) of virtually all the nutrients known to man. It includes—Vitamin A, B₁, B₂, B₆, B₁₂, C, D, E, K, Pantoic, Folic, Ascorbic, Calcium, Magnesium, Zinc, Iron, Iodine, Selenium, and Nicotinamide. All natural and organic. Ribomins will help you, like they've helped so many others, but only if you try them yourself.

Vitamin A—The lack of this vitamin, found naturally in yellow vegetables, may result in night blindness—which can be accompanied by skin itching, dry skin, and dry eyes. Other symptoms include poor growth, and loss of immunity to infections and other ailments related to Vitamin A deficiency.

Vitamin B-1 (Thiamine)—In the water cases of Thiamine deficiency, the disease called beriberi can result. Thiamine is very important to be it and nervous system functions.

Vitamin B-2 (Riboflavin)—This vitamin, in some cases, has been related to the problem of tinnitus. Ascorbic acid, which is a blood-building agent, can all be attributed to a Riboflavin deficiency. In some persons, this vitamin has been shown to inhibit the growth of cancer cells.

Vitamin B-3 (Niacin)—A deficiency of this can cause depression, anxiety, insomnia, but the lack of this vitamin, Niacin has found a new role in the treatment of nutria children and schizophrenia.

Vitamin C—Recent research of this vitamin shows it naturally promotes healing, offers protection against colds, and increases mental capabilities. A lack of this vitamin can cause scurvy, bleeding gums, broken blood vessels, anemia and decreased immunity to disease.

Vitamin D—A deficiency of Vitamin D can result in bone problems, particularly in older persons. Bones may become brittle and it is difficult to heal if broken. In some experiments, Vitamin D had been found to reduce epileptic attacks.

Vitamin E—Vitamin E may prove to be one of the biggest nutritional discoveries of the century. Vitamin E acts as a antioxidant and may have a effect on a cancer cell resistant.

from—The lack of this important mineral is known to cause megaloblastic anemia. Once in a while, anemia can result in a weak and physical condition and generally run-down feeling.

Iodine—This mineral is essential to a properly functioning thyroid gland. The lack of iodine can cause goiter, a swelling of the thyroid gland, and in many parts of the country.

Zinc—So important for iron and glandular function is well known for healing.

Selenium—An extremely important trace mineral, to help light and protect it from disease and the danger of pollution.

Calcium and Magnesium—These two minerals (in balance) are important for the healthy formation and maintenance of soft bones and teeth, as well as for relaxing muscle tension.

Ribomins contain all these vitamins and minerals—and many others. All natural. Completely organic. With no added starches, sugars or additives.

Ted Knight blasts all those uppity critics for branding TV shows silly

Zaay Ted Knight — star of the series "Too Close for Comfort" — lashed out at all those snooty critics who say TV is full of silly, fluff shows.

Ted, famed for his hilarious role as the bumbling newsman Ted Baxter of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" (MTM), believes TV should entertain the viewers as well as inform them.

"Most people sit at home from a hard day's work here on the television set to be entertained — not to be lectured or preached to," he told The NEWS.

"There's nothing with that. Television can't be intellectual on highway all the time. If you're in TV shows, most people laugh and forget the tragedy in the world around them. I say more power to them."

The feisty star insists that he's not defending sitcoms — a wacky sitcom about an overprotective father who goes to goofy extremes trying to keep an eye on his two teeny daughters.

He honestly believes that light and funny shows are important because they relax and help them forget their cares.

And he gets furious at uppity critics who think that only serious programs serve a purpose. Sitcoms are laughy first, he feels, and make people feel good, he said. "It's a valuable outlet for critics nowadays. I look at and learn such shows, but they're what the audience wants."

Each show, "Too Close" says, has its share of laughs. From critics who claim it's nothing but an excuse to tell sexy jokes.

But Ted thinks the show is popular because — besides being funny — it presents real problems that families encounter.

"Our show is successful because it features a typical American family trying to make the problems that precede ing society," recalled Ted. "There's some business, but there's no sex for sex's sake."

"I personally believe the show is also a success because it's about a man and woman who have been happily wed for 25 years and who still turn each other on."

"So many shows nowadays deal with the negative aspects of life — divorced parents, single rearing children."

"But we're a happy, positive family."

Ted is thrilled with the success of the show, because it's allowed him to escape the shadow of his famous MTM character — daffy Ted Baxter. And, it's made him a star.

"Being on MTM was a good experience, but there was no creative ability."

Each episode was not more than 30 minutes, but it was more like 25 minutes in the middle among

"And Mary was the star, as far as I'm concerned."

But "Too Close" has a big goal. "Finally, I'm a top headline in my series — my dream come true," Ted raved.

"I'm loving the Ted Baxter image for now and for all."

"Of course, the guy will always be a part of me in many ways."

"But people no longer associate him with my individuality."

edly related to his family role on "Too Close."

It's been said in the wide world for 32 years and 60 million grown children.

Ted credits his energy and luck in his hard work. He writes daily, can take a lot of work and takes 40 minutes to a day.

And when he's home, he likes to do what most Americans do — watch TV.

"I love television," he said, "but I don't think it's terrible and I don't think it's terrible and I don't think it's terrible."

"I spend two to three hours a day in front of the set watching movies, sports — and me still."

TV NEWS: 'Magnum' plans to quit acting, say friends

There's a rumor going around that the macho star of TV's hit "Magnum," Tom Selleck, plans to quit acting once his detective show goes off the air.

Friends of the 39-year-old actor say he's ready to end his business completely and is only waiting until his last series is on the air.

Selleck worked at being a gun long before he found a starring role in his own series. During that time, he made a living as a long-time model and in great roles on other shows.

He was repeatedly frustrated by producers who refused to let him in roles because he was a good-looking

Besides showing her son how to be a man and telling her rich "Dallas" has helped Linda Stordam's family learn to be more independent.

The sexy lady, who plays J. R.'s wife Sue Ellen, says that before the success of "Dallas," she was a full-time housewife and a struggling actress in a part-time job.

Now, while the show does little to make her name, she has learned to be a mother, a wife, and a woman. She has learned to be a woman and a mother.

'Body Human' is TV's sinister plot to turn our kids into sex maniacs

By REX WINSTON

Being a parent isn't easy, but I'd have no easier time raising my two rotten kids if TV would stick to comedy and drama and keep its sexual content out of the men and pop game.

For years now, we grown-ups have been warned against letting TV be a baby-sitter for our kiddies. Frugal, albeit snuff, TV was a rest easy until we parents are completely out of the picture.

Like big brother, these power hungry network dogs have hatched the most diabolical plot ever devised. They're trying to take over the hearts and minds of America's young people by making parents about as useful as ice cream on steak.

The networks' most savage weapon is a series of shows called "The Body Human." It's a mind control kit in its own right. Charles Manson could do any better.

I stumbled on CBS' shocking schemer a few weeks ago when my edition sent me home early for the first time in years. I thought I'd spend a few hours with Rex Jr. and watch a few afternoon children's shows. Much to my horror, my kid was taped into "The Body Human," which is all flesh and made me blood boil. I couldn't believe the stunt it was pulling. If this show was a mistake, it would be asked triple X.

This sex segment was all about how a boy becomes a man, and I mean nothing was left to the imagination. I fancy myself a man's man, but even I blushed when "The Body Human" went into a total, y'know, in how to make love to a woman.

Why is Mike I am not kidding a sex show for one kid?

I was glad the Mrs. was out shopping and couldn't watch this porno show.

Personally, I have always fought against the teaching of sex education in the schools. I figure it's my job to teach my own kids about the birds and the bees. I know the score. After all, me and the Mrs. didn't exactly lead our kids in Macy's department store.

But while I've been fighting the sex tech Bure of the Board of Education, TV has been sneaking behind my back teaching about sex to the afternoon. As I sit here, I'm concerned, "The Body Human" is disgusting, dirty and should be banned from the air. And those creeps at CBS headquarters must know that we parents don't want this filth on TV. That's why they run "The Body Human" in the daytime, when we parents are at work.

Those kids need to be castrated down, poll souped up.

What aspers one all the more is the way CBS censors this snuff by getting some big adult stars to host these kiddie porno shows.

Mike (G. J. Hunsicker) Farrell and Ken Howard hosted the show for boys. Mike Farrell is terrible on "M*A*S*H," and Howard's "Hawaii Five-O" show was canceled.

Maybe these two idiots should spend more time taking acting lessons and less time training their son to be a Casanova.

When Mike Farrell starts paying Rex Jr. a dental bill, then I'll let him play father. Until then, he better butt out.

Lucille Ball

Tonight's episode: Ricky and Fred seem to do nothing but watch the fights on TV.

When people argue about what was the greatest comedy show on TV, "I Love Lucy" usually wins hands down. Everybody is aware how every episode and remembers every hysterical scene.

What people tend to forget is "I Love Lucy" only played six years on the air. Although it was successful from 1951 to 1957, the real "Lucy" legend was created during its earliest years in reruns.

Even today, it's nearly impossible to find a city that doesn't show Lucy and Ricky. Desi Arnaz very nearly didn't get the part of Lucy's husband Ricky Ricardo. CBS executives were positive the American public would refuse to believe that they could be married, despite the fact they were husband and wife.

But Desi and Lucy were so sure that they spent $5,000 of their own money to produce the pilot.

The show ended when Desi and Lucy decided to cut back on their schedule.

Keep Brooke Shields and her lousy image off TV

I think Brooke Shields is the wrong person to join at image as is our young people. If my daughter ever attempted to be like her, her behavior would be blasted — over it she is 18.

Brooke's mother needs a good beat for exploiting her daughter like she has.

Boby-faced kid terrorizes neighborhood and cops can't stop him

Punk, 14, is city's worst thug

A ruthless hood that the cops call the microwave gangster in Brooklyn has held his neighborhood in a grip of bloody terror for months — and he's only 14 years old!

By JOE KEGGE

"It's a real punk — he'd kill you as quick as he'd look at you," said a cop.

"And we can't seem to do anything to stop him. We haul him in and the courts turn right around and let him out."

"It doesn't seem to make any sense at all."

The cops say they've snatched the vicious kid nicknamed Palo Viejo — Spanish for Old Stick — almost a dozen times for crimes ranging from burglary to attempted murder.

No matter what the charges, the boby-faced hood is not free to resume his reign of terror against shocked residents of his shabby neighborhood.

"We don't understand. We know this boy should not be out of jail running around," said a troubled store owner.

"We're scared to be in our houses and we're scared to be in our shops because of that boy. That's just not right for people to have to live at least."

The teen tyrant is the leader of a bloodthirsty street gang, the Assassinations, that aims a sundown and partially vacant apartment building for its headquarters.

Cops say a greedy, hard-hearted adult has given the young thugs — including his two brothers — knives, pistols and shotguns to terrorize the neighborhood and light off other gangs.

Twice in recent weeks Palo Viejo and his hoodlums have paraded down the streets and begun shooting wildly.

"Both times we took these guns, but they just got more keen that way," said a cop.

"We're going after the ape who got them the guns and someday we'll nail him. Just don't ask me when that will be."

Palo Viejo was busted last summer before he turned 12, but a judge turned him loose. With less training, the little hood was so nimble for grand larceny, possessing stolen goods and another robbery.

When the court freed him, he returned to the streets and shot his innocent bystanders in the throat during a bloody gook war.

The pint-sized punk was charged with attempted murder but released on bail.

He was hauled in a few weeks later for attacking an old man when the man wandered onto the gang's turf. As usual, the courts let him loose.

"They let him go when he shoots somebody — I guess they are going to do anything until he kills somebody," said a cop.

"And maybe they won't do anything then. It's a real tragedy — an injustice in the law, letting people who live here."

"That punk in the biggest gangs is all of Brooklyn!"

Rags to riches: Sweet Succe$$ of the jelly lady

By ILEN KEAMDT

Piney Marilyn Douglas has discovered the recipe for real success — she is food hot talker for cooking homemade jellies and jams into a $1-million-a-year business.

Incredibly, the Mendocino, Calif., "Jelly lady" — founder of the Mendocino Jam and Jelly Company — might never have become famous for fortune if a fire had not shattered her home and life 16 years ago.

"I was at work as a manager at a toy manufacturing company in Sebastopol, Calif., when I received a frantic call from a neighbor," Marilyn told THE NEWS. "I rushed home but by the time I arrived, there was nothing left but ash and rubble."

"Everything went gone. Ah I had left in the world were the clothes on my back."

The beautiful new home, all the possessions, that Marilyn had spent years working for were reduced to rubble.

"I thought there was nothing left to live for," she said. "I had pin money and I had left my house."

As she began to recover from the shock, I thought, "Maybe I've been a tramp." Here I'd been working 16-hour days at a job I didn't really enjoy and as I could buy more blouses and things. And what had I accomplished? All my effort had gone to rubble and dust.

Marilyn quit her job, moved to Mendocino where she cultivated a one-employment checks while she waited to get her life in order.

Who she went back to work, the former executive took a job as a chambermaid.

Then she took a job as a dishwasher, but the restaurant owners had already heard that Marilyn was a great cook and offered her a job as assistant chef.

She stayed for four years on a her ambition slowly returned, she agreed to teach a course in food preservation at a nearby community college.

"I had been making my own jams for over 30 years," said Marilyn, now 42.

"So I taught my students my secrets — how to make jams and jellies from natural ingredients."

A local gourmet shop asked Marilyn to whip up a batch of jams and jellies they could sell in two days. All 72 jars had been sold and Marilyn was on her way.

Now, she runs a farm, grows her own berries and plums and employs 10 women.

Her jellies and jams sell in gourmet shops around the country and through a mail order house.

"That time was a wonderful blessing in disguise. I'm living in the country. I'm relaxed, I'm happy. And I have a very successful home-based business."

"Who could ask for anything more than that?"

Marilyn Douglas admires a jar of the jelly that makes her a real $1 million a year.

What Happened on Holy Thursday Night?

The Story of Jesus in Gethsemane.
Jesus came with them to a small estate called Gethsemane and he said to his disciples, "Stay here while I go over there to pray" (Matthew 26:36).

He took down the two sons of Zebedee, James and John, with him. And sadness came over him and great distress. Then he said to them "My soul is sorrowful to the point of death. Stay here and keep awake with me." And going in a little further—a secret place—the fall on his face and prayed: "My Father," he said, "If it is possible, let this cup pass me by. Nevertheless it is as you will. I would have it!"

HE CAME BACK TO HIS DISCIPLES AND FOUND THEM ASLEEP. AND HE SAID TO PETER, "So you had not the strength to keep awake with me one hour? You should be awake, and praying not to be put to the test. The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak." Again a second time, he went away and prayed "My Father," he said, "If this cup cannot pass away without my drinking, your will be done."

And he came back again and found them sleeping. Their eyes were so heavy; and they could find no answer for him. Leaving them there he went away again and prayed for the third time, repeating the same words (Matthew).

Then an angel appeared to him, coming from heaven to give him strength. In his anguish he prayed even more earnestly, and his sweat fell to the ground like great drops of blood (Luke).

He came back a third time and he said to them, "You can sleep now and take your rest. It is all over. The hour has come!"

AND THE MORNING CAME AS THE CRUEL ROMAN SOLDIERS CAME TO ARREST HIM.

FROM THAT MOMENT GETHSEMANE BECAME A SHRINE, and when better days dawned for the Christians a permanent shrine there.

In 1932 the Franciscans became the guardians of Gethsemane and erected a church structure around it. The present shrine it was completed in 1974.

Elephant's trunk saves her from raging flood

A terrified elephant trapped in a torrent of raging floodwaters miraculously survived for three days by holding her trunk high above the swirling water.

"That's one smart elephant—and one very lucky elephant," said the cop who spotted the huge beast as it fought off the deadly current. Gerry, a popular 12-year-old female, was one of a number of animals released from the Frank Buck Memorial Zoo in Gainesville, Tex., when a violent rain soaked the area.

Most of the animals were rounded up and returned to the zoo when the three-day downpour ceased, but Gerry was missing and feared dead. Then rescuers spotted the terrified elephant trapped between fallen trees in the midst of a muddy, churning stream. It was deep.

"All we could see was her back and a little bit of her head above the water," said a rescuer. "She was holding her trunk way up in the air and breathing through it."

"Otherwise, she would certainly have drowned."

The floodwaters where Gerry was stranded were so savage that zoo officials and cops could not reach her at first. When the torrent receded, they were able to free her and lead her to dry land.

"She's a little banged up and scared," said a keeper. "But we're just happy to have her back—she's our star."

Being too alike can lead to divorce, expert says

By DICK DONOVAN

If you and your mate are like two peas in a pod — have the same likes, dislikes, emotions and interests — you're probably headed for divorce!

That's the shocking result of a marriage study done by psychology Professor James Cooley of Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn.

"If people are both very stable or both very unstable, they are more likely to get divorced than if one is calm and the other excitable," he told THE NEWS.

"We wouldn't have believed it, but it kept popping up in the data all the time. A high degree of similarity is (a signal of a) break-in."

Conloy's compatibility study followed the lives of 200 couples since they were engaged 43 years ago. He found that most marriage partners who got di-voiced were similar in height, weight, body type and temper-

He found the same is true with self-confidence and dominance. If both are passive or if both are dominant, a divorce probably looms on the horizon.

However, if one of the partners is dominant and the other passive, the marriage is for more likely to last, he found.

"It's like dancing — on the way dancing used to be — one of the dancers has to lead," he said. "And it doesn't matter which of the partners — the husband or wife — is the dance partner."

SUB, some similarity appears necessary for a marriage to evolve from a relationship. Canley found that people of the same religious, ethnic backgrounds, locality or educational level tended to marry.

"But those couples who are radically different are generally restricted to those that usually broke up before marriage," he added.

The 31-year-old psychology professor "inherited" his study from E. Lowell Kelly, professor emeritus at the University of Michigan, who began his study in 1935.

KaDy compiled detailed data on the backgrounds and personalities of 300 engaged couples who volunteered to take part in a long-term study of their married lives and the events con-

In 1994, Kelly did a follow-up, tracking down 86 percent of the original 300 and publishing his findings. Conley met Kelly in 1978 and decided to launch a second follow-up study.

He located 460 of the original 600 individuals and found that another 130 had died. About two-thirds of those he found were still married to their original mates.

He also gathered new information about older couples. His study showed that most of

Also subjects, who were about 70, are happier now than they were in the past. More than 50 percent said they are happier now than in the 1930s and 47 percent said they are happier than they were in the 1950s.

Fewer teens are smoking pot

Fewer high school students are smoking marijuana on a regular basis than they were three years ago, says the nation's top drug abuse official.

Dr. William Pollin, director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, reported that daily use of the illicit weed is down to 1 percent of high school seniors.

In 1970, 10.7 percent of the country's seniors reported smoking as a daily habit.

But the cost of every 10 students Yuss admitted experimenting with the drug was $100,000, Peltis told a Senate subcommittee that there is growing evidence marijuana causes learning difficulties to traffic accidents.

Movieland's hottest new actress fears she's too plain for stardom

By KITTY McNAUL

Meryl Streep may not be beautiful, but critics think her acting in the movie "The French Lieutenant's Woman" is terrific.

America's hottest new actress — who says she was an ugly duckling child — is convinced she's not pretty enough to play some of the superstar roles.

Meryl Streep won an Oscar for "Kramer vs. Kramer" and is being hailed as the new superstar of the silver screen for her current performance in "The French Lieutenant's Woman."

But the 32-year-old blonde confesses that her big nose makes her feel too plain to play roles given to beautiful actresses.

"I just have a hooked nose. I will never be able to play any of the great beauties," she sighed.

"Even with that makeup girl, the hairdresser and lighting men fussing over me, I still don't come out looking lumpy."

"And I feel insecure for ages if my nose is mentioned by a critic."

Incredibly, Meryl doesn't believe the was right for "French Lieutenant," the story of an imperious beauty who draws a man into a disastrous web of passion.

"By taking the film, I could be helping I was more beautiful," she remarked. "There

'There comes a point when you have to look the part'

at this point what you have to look the part, especially in movies."

"I know I'm good-looking enough to play any of the women I just didn't play... not for the character with her intense beauty... it was too tough."

Meryl's deeply rooted insecurity complex comes from her childhood when the world of an ugly duckling.

In fact, she says she had the face of a dowdy, middle-aged woman when she was less than 10.

"I was ugly," said Meryl. "With my glasses and a penmanship book I looked like a misfit."

"I had the same face I have today... the street was I could be reading."

"I'm still haunted by that childhood face."

Meryl is so used by the industry that she has been called "the face of pabney" — especially in her role as the cover girl in a movie — that has proclaimed her as the new girl actress.

She still smartens from the film she lost a role in a major film just a year back when the producer didn't think she was pretty enough for the part.

When it comes down to it, Meryl dresses and lives exactly like a plain Jane housewife with her sculptor husband Don Gummer and young son in New York.

A lot of actresses pose a lot of themselves into their roles, but Meryl says she's too afraid to play herself.

The only reason she's acting — it gives her a chance to escape her humdrum life.

"Imagination is my — your biggest little me — all the time," she said.

"What could be more boring than that?"

You can learn to handle daily hassles with ease

You don't have to blow your top over those little things that irritate you. Nervous ray experts who offer some simple steps to make life a breeze.

"Everyday problems are part of everyone's life," says Dr. David Burns, a psychology professor at the University of Pennsylvania who wrote "Feeling Good: The New Mood Therapy."

"There's no escaping them so it's smart to know what to do before they crop up."

Here are some suggestions from Dr. Burns to help you handle:

1. Work out simple solutions to problems that recur regularly. Take time to find an easy, fast answer. If you're always losing your glasses, lay them out, put them only in two convenient places in the house.

2. Organize your home and office. Spend an hour keeping the system in tip-top running order to save time and energy.

3. Don't accept more responsibility than you can handle or you won't be able to cope. Learn to use your schedule to solve problems so you don't get overwhelmed.

4. Don't let other people push their problems on you. Sympathy drains and takes a happy solution without allowing to old them. Tell them, "I've had the very same problem" or "I know someone who's been in the same situation." This makes them feel better without putting a strain on you.

1. Don't get irritated over every little thing. Small annoyances won't make a major difference if you let.

2. If you're late and shopping lists so you will be more efficient and less forgetful, and take time each day to plan.

3. If you plan, prevent and calmly recall, everyday problems shouldn't get the best of you.

Dr. Burns said, "Dr. Bernhard Schwartz, consulting psychiatrist to the National Institute for Rehabilitation Engineering in Silver Spring, Md., agrees that planning is the key to coping with everyday problems."

"There's no point in letting everyday problems get the best of you when a few easy steps can add you down. Getting better organized is one way," said Dr. Schwartz.

"I had a patient who let everyday problems get her down. She would lie down and get very depressed whenever one came up."

"Now when a problem arises, she gets up and does something constructive."

Dustin Hoffman was an Oscar for his sensitive performance in "Kramer vs. Kramer" and so did Faye Dunaway. Her acting ability made her a star in the movie stand out.

Grateful mom sends roses to judge who convicted her son

Everyday little ups and downs can be so grateful to Judge Frank Price for convicting his son on drug charges — that she sent him a bouquet of roses.

Price of Houston was stunned when the red roses arrived with a card saying:

"Thank you for your wisdom."

Price convicted her 31-year-old son Brian on drug and auto theft charges last March and could have sent him to prison for 10 years instead, he volunteered him to a special three-year program to treat him of his addiction and rehabilitation.

For the past eight months, Brian has been confined to a special clinic called Center and it's changed his life.

"I don't know the words to describe the overwhelming feeling I have now," said his mother.

"The people I've known here have provided more than a program to an extended family for Brian."

Brian says the program has really saved his life.

His grateful mom sent the judge the flowers for leniency and justice with mercy.

"Frank Price is a real idealist. I think of often," she explained.

"I still remember that day in the courtroom, sitting back and praying so hard that the judge would look deep into his heart and see some good in Brian."

Dallas—18 years later

Thousands still visit the spot where John F. Kennedy was assassinated

By MAM HATHAN

Today, 18 years after the death of John F. Kennedy, an estimated 150,000 people a year visit the spot in Dallas where he was assassinated.

The gray old Texas School Book Depository Building is the most photographed structure in the entire city, and tourists stand in Dealey Plaza pointing to the window from where Lee Harvey Oswald fired the shots that killed the President on Nov. 22, 1963.

Today, the Marx Brothers-Casino sign which stood on top of the Texas School Book Depository is just a ghost, and the only identifying words on the building are its original name, Casio way-Bird.

In December 1977 the Dallas County commissioners bought the 60-year-old building. As sixty decades (millennia) it will be considered a relic.

The 8th floor, from which Lee Harvey Oswald fired his rifle, will be turned into an historical exhibit.

Mrs. Connel Hunt-Jones, a member of the special committee which will set up the exhibit, said that interest in the site is running higher than last.

"We took a survey over a six-month period of people who found it Dealey Plaza," she said. "They came from all over the country and wanted to visit the building. People are aghast when walking in the Plaza open. It may be an unpleasant part of history but it's still history."

But many Texans would like to let the building down — as it won't remain as a monument and reminder.

The Texas School Book Depository as it looked in 1963, as it is today, below. The shots were fired from the window at right in the second floor in a line (arrow).

'That's the window ...'

These young women are among the 150,000 people who come each year to see the spot John F. Kennedy was assassinated. The 8th floor of the Depository is to be turned into an historical exhibit.

NBC's anti-dope show linked to controversial church cult

Cathy Lee and her personal manager, who worked on the "Get High" series, are supposedly members of the cult.

The sexy actress allegedly was once hooked on drugs and Scientology helped unlock her. — Gary Deeb.

Teen relies on God, not shots, to beat rabies

Young Jim Kartetz was bitten by a rabid bat and he knows he may die a horrible death. But he has put his life in the hands of God and refuses to take anti-rabies shots.

Some believe Jim is just being foolishly stubborn.
